The American Journal of Hypertension, Ltd. and Nature Publishing Group announce a new publishing partnership

In the fall of 2007, NPG and the American Journal of Hypertension, Ltd. will join together to publish the American Journal of Hypertension. The journal will be launched with Dr. M. H. Alderman as the journal's Editor-in-Chief.

"We at the American Journal of Hypertension Ltd. look forward to what promises to be an exciting and productive collaboration with the Nature Publishing Group" states Dr. Alderman.

Dr. Alderman and the journal's editorial team aim to provide a forum for both basic and clinical scientists to discuss all aspects of hypertension and related topics, including cardiovascular disease and epidemiology.

The American Journal of Hypertension is a peer-reviewed journal, providing a forum for scientific inquiry of the highest standard, and publishes articles on basic sciences, molecular biology, clinical and experimental hypertension, cardiology, epidemiology, pediatric hypertension, endocrinology, neurophysiology, and nephrology. Authors are invited to submit previously unpublished, original clinical or experimental research articles, special communications, review articles and letters to the editor.

NPG was chosen by the American Journal of Hypertension, Ltd. as the publisher because of its strategic capabilities and experience in publishing premier scientific journals.

"NPG joins the American Journal of Hypertension, Ltd. partnership with great enthusiasm" says Annette Thomas, NPG's Managing Director, about the new partnership.
